

This is similar to what our new exterior doors will look like.

The expanded gathering space is taking shape.

We have round columns between the old part of the church and the north extension. The pink and green color scheme is changing to tan with purple and green accents.

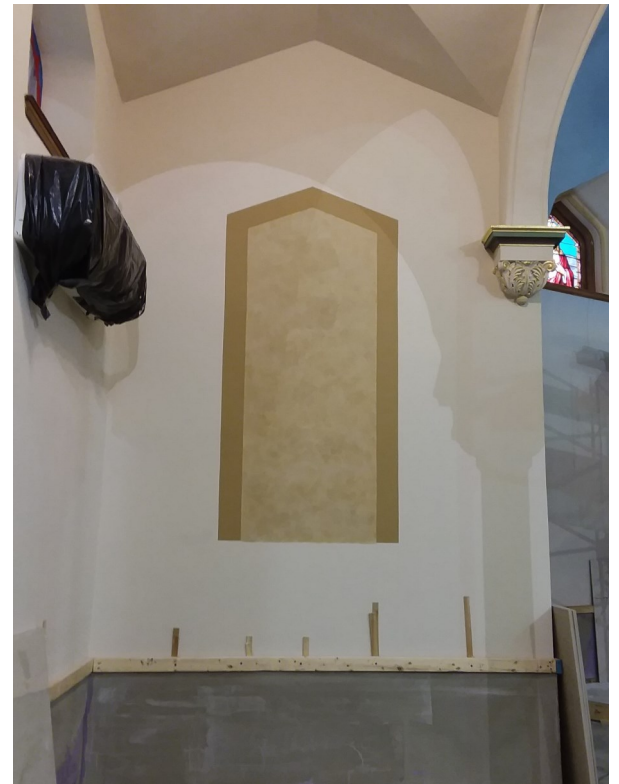

The ceiling over the sanctuary looks like a clear blue sky.

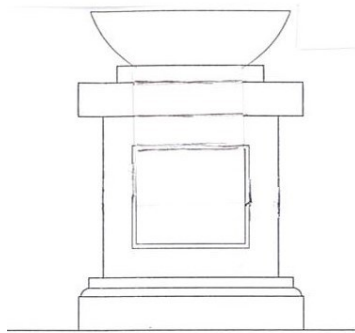

The walls are receiving a wainscoting of porcelain tile that looks like marble.

The painted design is nearly finished for the walls behind the statues.

The new altar, ambo, tabernacle stand and baptismal font will be white with tile insets. The baptismal bowl will be gold-colored.

The old confessional on the south wall is being turned into a devotional alcove. It'll hold icons, votive candles, and kneelers.

The paneling is gone from the dark stairwell to the choir loft. It's brightened up with drywall and paint.
