WE ARE ALL EVANGELIZERS

(and whatever else is on Deacon Eric's mind)

When the Saints Come Marchin' In...

When I was 12 years old, the last of my three sisters got married. The Mass was in the morning and the reception was in the afternoon, so then some relatives and close friends came back to our house to continue to celebrate the marriage. At some point, the group decided to start singing -- not necessarily because they were such great singers, but because -- well, you know why.

Anyhow, I don't remember any of the other songs the group sang, but they did start singing the classic Louie Armstrong song "When the Saints Come Marchin' In." It is a peppy tune, but more associated with New Orleans funerals, than with weddings. Though I was only 12, I knew people couldn't sing a song about marching while standing still. My family at some point started marching right out the front door and down the street and around the block. Fortunately, there was no such thing as neighborhood associations in 1960's Detroit because it was well after dark and the group could be heard the whole time they were marching.

For those unfamiliar with the song, its lyrics are about saints marching into heaven. I can neither confirm nor deny that those who were singing that day marched into heaven when their time came. I pray that all the deceased singers are now with the Lord, whether they marched or crawled into the promised land. Actually, this memory was just supposed to be an introduction to today's topic, but it's taken up more than half of my column space. Oh well.

The topic is all the saints that are on the Church's General Roman Calendar this week. Marching their way into the Masses of the week are: St. Benedict, St. Henry, St. Kateri Tekakwitha and St. Bonaventure.

St. Benedict is a very well-known saint of the fifth and sixth centuries, who in essence created the framework around which most monastic orders are formed. He became so disgusted with the immorality of Rome that he went off and began a life as a hermit. Many of his disciples followed him and so established deaneries of ten monks apiece. Benedict established a set of guidelines that Benedictines still follow today called simply "The Rule." These guidelines emphasized authority, obedience, stability and community life.

From "The Rule" to a ruler. St. Henry was a Holy Roman Emperor in the early 11th century. Though he is the only saint of the four remembered this week whose feast is not considered "Major" by the Church, I note him here because Henry was my father's name and as a Louie Armstrong fan, he was in the march I outlined above - probably among the leaders.

Next we remember St. Kateri Tekakwitha, the first canonized Native American. St. Kateri's statue is one of several new ones at St. Joe's. And finally, let's remember St. Bonaventure, one of the greatest theologians in Church history and one of only 37 Doctors of the Church -- a title given to saints who advance understanding of Church doctrine and dogma. He expanded on much of St. Augustine's work.

Let's remember them all in our prayers this week.
